Borris and the Game

It was a warm spring afternoon, and Borris's baseball team was playing the orange team. The score showed Borris's team up by one in the final inning. One of the orange players hit a high fly ball to the outfield where Borris was. He started running toward the briar-covered fence and made the game-winning catch right as he ran into the fence. He had thorns all in his uniform from the briars. However, he didn't care because he was the hero of the game. Borris thought to himself, "This torn uniform now has a story to tell!"

Why didn't Borris get upset about his torn uniform?

What Happened?

There used to be a beautiful beach in my hometown. The shore was so pretty, and people would come from miles around to lie on the beach and soak in the sun. People would ride horses by the edge of the water. Then came the business boom in my town. As the new buildings came, they needed a place to ship out of. So, they tore up the pretty shore and made a deep port. It was neat to see all of the big ships coming and going. They built a lot of little stores, such as an ice cream shop and a flip-flop store. But I sure do miss playing on the pretty beach shore.

Is the author happy about the changes to the town? How do you know?
